It mentions Montsegur. In the blurb it says: 'In the village is a museum devoted to the castle's history and set into the wall of one of the houses is a decorated stone, said to have been brought down from it'. When I went to Montsegur a couple of years ago, I asked the lady in the Museum if she knew where the house was. She did not speak English, so I tried in French, which I can speak a little of. She said she did not know (either that or she didn't really understand my question). Anyway, she wasn't particularly helpful. I had a look around the village, but I could not see it anywhere. I wonder if it is a carved nautilus stone like the one on Richard's cottage. If anyone is going to Montsegur, perhaps you could have a look too? Didn't go up to the castle but nevertheless walked to the all important stele and stoped for a minute to reflect on what had happened there so long ago. But I think that I will be back in September. I can certainly check with the lady (I speak French fluently!). Dr Liebchen IP: Logged |

If you find the house, you could try and speak to the owner - you never know, he/she may be the Grail Keeper. Alternatively, perhaps you could get the phone number and call him.
